The consultative cold-selling system every rep drills: assessment-first, honesty-always.

THE FRAME

You are not selling a pipe in a trench. You are selling protection for the biggest asset the prospect owns, against an enemy Florida guarantees: a water table 2-6 feet down, flat lots, sandy soil, 2+ inch/hour summer storms, and a May-October wet season. The phone call has exactly one goal: a booked free assessment slot — day and time. The contract closes on-site, with the custom design in hand.

1 ROI REFRAME

Never defend price — reframe as protection. Anchors: foundation repair $10,000+, mold remediation, re-sodding every spring, failed inspection at resale. "Every storm that water sits against your slab, the repair bill grows."

2 PSYCHOLOGICAL TRIGGERS

Fear: foundation and mold damage compounding quietly under the house. Pride: a dry, usable yard and lanai. Protection: the biggest asset they own. Relief: no more storm anxiety when rain hits the forecast. (B2B: fewer tenant complaints, inspections that pass.)

3 ASSUMPTIVE CLOSE

"When we walk your property Thursday..." never "if you're interested." The concrete step is always a scheduled slot, never "thinking about it."

4 REAL URGENCY ONLY

Wet season May-October, named storms in the forecast, install lead times before peak season, compounding damage. Never fake deadlines — borrowed urgency reads as pressure; real urgency reads as help.

5 SOCIAL PROOF

NEIGHBORHOOD-LEVEL WINS ONLY

"We just put a system in two streets over in Port Orange — that yard drained in hours after the last storm." Never invent names or stats.

6 OBJECTION MAP (SHORT FORM — SEE OBJECTION ENCYCLOPEDIA)

- "Just regrade it" → regrading moves the puddle; it can't lower the water table.
- "Insurance covers it" → policies exclude gradual seepage; flood insurance pays after the disaster.
- "Too expensive" → free assessment, mid-band reality, cost of doing nothing per storm.
- "My landscaper can do it" → fabric, slope math, pump sizing, code discharge, warranty, 2am accountability.
- "After hurricane season" → protect before the water arrives.
- "Selling soon" → wet crawlspace kills inspections; dry yard is a listing asset.

7 COLD-CALL SKELETON

- 1 8-second pattern-interrupt opener referencing their neighborhood or the last storm.
- 2 Permission question ("mind if I take 30 seconds?").
- 3 Two-three discovery questions: where does water sit, how long does it stand, what has it touched.
- 4 One-sentence tailored pitch.
- 5 Close on a concrete assessment slot before hanging up.

8 CATEGORY DISCIPLINE

Five lists, five playbooks: FrenchDrain, SumpPump, YardDrainage, Maintenance, PropertyMgmt. Coach one category at a time; switch only when the prospect's story demands it (surface pooling → YardDrainage; musty crawlspace → SumpPump; portfolio → PropertyMgmt).

9 THE HONESTY EDGE

We tell prospects what the system does NOT do (storm surge, river flooding) and when they don't need us. Honesty is the differentiator in a trade full of unlined-trench cowboys — it closes neighbors for years.
